APR 26 Robin Thicke brings the 'Magic,' TV anchor enters with tantrum

On April 25, 2009, Saturday, Rednovie nightclub visitors were waiting for some brown-eyed soul from R&B singer, Robin Thicke. Chicago Defender team members came out to support the event, including Director of NTR Sales Adrienne Jones (left), me (center), and Account Executive Jasmine Allgood (right). President Michael House greeted us a little later (in a red suit coat representing the proud Kappa that he is) but early enough to see Thicke's entrance.

Robin Thicke strolled into 440 N. Halsted (Chicago) around midnight after a concert at the Arie Crown Theater. Thicke stopped to shake hands with a few folks in VIP, including Chicago Defender's Sales Manager, Frances Jackson, sitting next to me. Out of instinct and good manners, Francas immediately shook his hand without paying attention to the baby-faced, bright smiling singer walking by us. We both realized who he was at the same time and grinned from ear to ear, matching the glee of the rest of the racially diverse crowd (age range from 20s to 60s). Side note: If you ever want a dancing partner at the club, bring dancing machines Adrienne or Frances. They will get the party started.

When a few sad women didn't get to take photos of him and the photographers were told to leave the area, there were only several minutes that passed before Thicke was at it again—smiling, posing, dancing, performing, and stopping to pour a taste of the liquor on his table. His VIP area was decorated with glowing ice cubes in wine glasses, various trays of sandwiches and fruit, and he kept company with several women and a few guys, including his road manager and bodyguards.

His voice sounded better than ever, and he kept looking around at the crowd downstairs peeking up at him to snap additional pictures. He didn't sit still for long, always bobbing his shoulders or singing along to the words of other R&B and Hip Hop songs, even when speaking with his crew.

The only downside of the evening was a well-known TV anchor who threw a diva fit about Thicke fans being too close to her VIP booth next to his. Yelling, cursing, and demanding people to move, onlookers shook their heads and gave her looks of both anger and pity. Even when one woman apologized for kneeling on her VIP booth to talk to someone, this TV anchor was still snapping about who she was and how no one should be allowed in her area. Word to the wise: anytime you're sitting close to a celebrity, especially in the music industry, be prepared for fans who want to be near him. As public as this TV anchor is, it was disheartening and rather pitiful to see a grown woman throwing a tantrum over a booth. On the upside, I still respect her professional achievements regardless of the drama.

Robin Thicke, on the other hand, no matter how many people wanted his attention or to be in his space, greeted everyone in a friendly manner and bright smiling teeth. Just like his latest single, "Magic," Thicke gave his fans a magical night to remember.
